

Good Practices Central Transdanubia – Hungary

In Central Transdanubia CCIIs are present in wide range. One main branch is the strongly knowledge-based, innovative IT sector which has high added value and it is mostly concentrated in the urban parts of the region. With cooperation between universities, research bodies and enterprises this sector could strengthen its leader position in the development possibilities. The other types of activities are the different kinds of arts, crafts and entertainment which can be found in the urban and the rural parts as well. These activities are based on the cultural and historical heritage and they are important not just because of the economic performance but also of diverse cultural environment and its contribution to the quality of life. Two good practices are presented below:

Albacomp Innovation Centre

The Albacomp Innovation Centre was established in 2015 in Székesfehérvár and boasts an impressive 4000 m² area. The Centre has offices and place for production as well as it is suitable environment for R&D&I, back office and commercial activities, services, education and production. It can provide research infrastructure for the settling cluster members. The Albacomp RI Ltd. has agreement with the Alba Regia Technical Faculty (Óbuda University) in the field of dual training, so the centre is home for educational activities too.

Valley of Arts

In the field of culture the Valley of Arts plays a significant role. The self-organized summer festival exists since 1989 and offers various cultural, musical, theatrical and literary programs. It is based on the local culture, built and natural environment. The centre of the festival is Kapolcs village but it was expanded to the villages nearby. The income of the festival is divided between the participating villages and they can use it for rural development aims. Besides the economic results the Valley of Arts catalyses and promotes folklore activities and creates identity. The festival also gives importance to the local handmade products which bring revenue for the local people and extend the festival's impacts during the whole year.
